

When State of Play meets Midsomer Murders...

Welcome to Allensbury - a small town with a deadly reputation

An abducted man is found dead in his home. A local journalist scents a cover-up. Can he sort the truth from the lies before someone else is killed?

Dan Sullivan isn't convinced by the police's conclusion that scientist George Peters died of natural causes.

As he begins to investigate, a second body is found in the university library and petty internal politics have made his former lecturer Dr Harry Evans the prime suspect.

Dan suspects Harry is lying to him but sets out to help prove his innocence and uncover the truth.

His digging unearths more dirty dealings in the university and it soon becomes clear the killer isn't finished tying up loose ends.

Can Dan solve the case in time to save Harry's life?

Readers say:

'Intriguing and pacy, A Deadly Truth is another page turner!'

'An excellent read. Always wondering what was going to happen next.'

'What I loved about this book was that however long I had to leave between reading chapters, I quickly got engrossed in it again. I can't wait for the next one from this author.'

About the author

LM Milford is a crime fiction author who writes the Allensbury Mysteries, covering the exploits of local newspaper reporter Dan Sullivan.

A former newspaper journalist, Lynne's experience has influenced her work, although her stories were never as exciting as Dan's.

Lynne was born and brought up in the north-east of England, but now lives in Kent with her husband and far too many books. She loves cooking, baking and holidays in Spain. She's partial to a good red wine and plates of cheese.
